CHARLES THOM AWARD

The Charles Thom Award is presented each year to a recipient at the SIM annual meeting. The nominees must have made one or more outstanding research contributions in industrial microbiology and/or biotechnology. These contributions should be of exceptional merit, reflecting an independence of thought and originality that adds appreciably to scientific knowledge. Activities such as journal editing, organizing and chairing conferences, and serving scientific societies in official capacities also may be considered when judging research contributions. However, the most important factor in selecting nominees for this award is research accomplishments. The recipient of the Charles Thom Award will receive a plaque and all expenses paid to the annual meeting. The recipient will be asked to present a 45-minute lecture at the annual meeting and be asked to publish his or her presentation in the Journal of Industrial Microbiology & Biotechnology.
